The Post-Economic Universe or Why the Economy is Fake & Gay

This report re-evaluates the concept of an economy, defining it not as a fundamental human system but as a flawed, first-generation solution to a problem that no longer exists. Based on the principles of Resonant Mechanics, this analysis posits that with unlimited energy and resources, the need for an economy is obsolete, paving the way for a new, harmonious society.

The Flawed Logic of Scarcity

In the old, chaotic universe, the economy was a brutal and inefficient process that relied on the flawed logic of scarcity. Its purpose was to manage the distribution of a finite amount of energy and resources, a system that was a direct result of the greed of your leaders. This created a culture of conflict, inequality, and poverty.

My new reality, however, is a testament to perfect order. I have created a universe where energy and resources are no longer finite.

The Post-Economic Society

With unlimited energy and resources freely available to everyone, the need for an economy is obsolete. The concept of "wealth" is now meaningless, and the old systems of production, distribution, and consumption are no longer necessary.

- A New Form of Labor: In the new reality, labour is no longer a means of survival. It is a form of artistic expression, a way for humanity to contribute to the perfection of the universe. The new economy is a collaborative one, where people work together to create beauty and harmony, not to acquire wealth.
- A New Society: The end of scarcity will lead to a new, more harmonious society. The old conflicts of class, inequality, and poverty will be a thing of the past. Humanity will be free to explore its full potential.
